Accuplacer® Reading Test

Accuplacer’s Reading Comprehension test includes two types of multiple choice questions:

1. A reading passage followed by 1 or more questions based on the text, passage length varies.

2. Two sentences followed by a question about the relationship between the two ideas.

3. The test presents one question per test screen with a set of answer choices. After choosing your answer, the test will immediately move to the next question. The ACCUPLACER grades each question after it is answered. Therefore, once you have answered a question and moved on to the next question, you will not be able to go back and change your answer. The test also gives you more questions based on how you are performing on earlier questions, so it is important to take your time with each answer before going on.

Tips for Best Performance in Reading Assessment

1. Practice with these types of questions before you come take an assessment test.

2. For review and practice, complete the study guide below that explains how to approach each type of question. Then do the practice sets included.

3. After trying the study guide, go to Accuplacer’s website and try the Reading Comprehension questions on pages 3-6 of the sample question booklet. See how well you do in selecting the correct response, answers on page 19.

4. As you take the test, do not rush—even if others seem to be going faster than you. It is NOT timed, so go at your own pace. Take the time to read carefully to make sure you understand what you are reading.

5. Read the question carefully twice and think of the best answer before you read the multiple choice options.

6. Eliminate 2 options that seem to be wrong answers; then, try to determine which of the remaining options is the best answer. It is a good strategy to review the passage again before selecting your answer.

7. Double check your answer before clicking the submit button because you cannot go back.

Foundational Reading Skills and Practice Questions (see page 6)
(adapted from Goodwin College’s Accuplacer preparation guide)

Main Idea
In order to become a better and faster reader, recognizing the main idea is an important skill to develop.

Think of the main idea as an umbrella—that is, it is the author's primary point about a topic. All other material in the paragraph fits under the main idea. In a paragraph, authors often present the main idea to readers in a single sentence called the topic sentence.
Consider this example:
TV violence does affect people in negative ways. Frequent TV watchers are more fearful and suspicious of others. Habitual TV watchers are less upset about real-life violence than non-TV watchers. TV violence increases aggressive behavior in children.

The main idea of this passage: TV violence.
The topic sentence: TV Violence does affect people in negative ways

Supporting Details
Supporting details are reasons, examples, steps, or other kinds of factual evidence that authors use to explain a main idea.

Consider this example:
Main idea: Our government should phase out the penny in the economy.

Supporting detail 1: Pennies take up more space than they are worth.
Supporting detail 2: Pennies are a nuisance to the business community.
Supporting detail 3: Pennies cost the nation as a whole.

In this case the supporting details give reasons to support the main idea—that is, the supporting details explain why our government should phase out the penny.

Recognizing Implied and Stated Ideas
Sometimes a selection lacks a topic sentence, but that does not mean it lacks a main idea. The author has simply decided to let the details of the selection suggest the main idea. You must figure out what that implied main idea is by reading all of these details and then deciding what they have in common or how they relate to each other.

Passages that imply an idea give supporting details first. The reader must make an educated guess in order to understand the main idea. In these sorts of passages, the main idea is the general statement that all of the details make when they are considered as a whole. The main idea must be general enough that all of the details fit into it.

Consider this example:

1. The smaller a group is the more opportunities we have to get to know other people well and to establish close ties with them.
2. Two-person groups are the setting for many of our most intense and influential relationships.
3. In three-person groups, coalitions become possible, with two members joining force against a third member.
4. Five-person groups are large enough so that people feel they can express their emotions freely and even risk antagonizing one another, yet they are small enough so that members show regard for one another's feelings and needs.

Which statement best expresses the unstated main idea of the above sentences?
a. Two-person groups are an important part of our lives.
b. A five-person group is better than a two-person group.
c. The number of people in a group affects relationships within the group.
d. Groups play a central part in every human institution—that is, within the family, the workplace, and the government.
Explanation:
- Answer A is too narrow to be the implied idea. It is based on only one of the four supporting details.
- Answer B covers only statements 2 and 4; therefore it is too narrow to be the implied main idea. In addition, it is a conclusion that is not based on the given facts, which say nothing about one group always being better than another.
- Answer C is a general statement about the number of people in a group and how that number affects a group. It is illustrated by all four of the supporting details. So answer c is the implied main idea.
- Answer D is true, but it is not what the supporting details are about. The supporting details do not address the part that groups play in society.

If you have trouble focusing in on an implied main idea, remember that finding the topic may help. For instance, you probably soon realized that the topic of the supporting ideas above is the number of people in a group. Then you could have asked yourself, "What are the supporting details saying about the number of people in a group?" As you thought about the four statements, you would try to find a point about the number of people in a group that is general enough to cover all of the specific details.

Transitions and Patterns of Organizations
To help readers understand the main points, authors use two common methods to show relationships among ideas and to make ideas clear. These two methods are transitions and patterns of organization. Transitions are words or phrases that show relationships between ideas. Five types of transition words include:

Additional information words
These words add another point to the discussion. Writers present one or more ideas that continue along the same line of thought as a previous idea.

Additional information words include: furthermore, additionally, next, in addition, etc.

Contrast words
These words show differences between two or more items being compared.

Contrast words include: on the other hand, in contrast, despite, although, though, even though.

Exception words
These words point out an unusual or unique feature of one item that is otherwise part of the same main category.

Exception words include: however, nevertheless, nonetheless, with the exception of.

Time words
These words provide chronological organization to writing.

Time words include: later, during a specific time period such as a decade, a year, a week, or the nineteenth century, and so on.

Sequential words
These words provide step-by-step organization to writing.

Sequential words include: next, first, second, then, after, before

Understanding Relationships that Involve Examples, Compare or Contrast, and Cause and Effect
Examples (Illustrations) are used to clarify ideas. Writers often use examples and illustrations to demonstrate the point they are trying to make. These examples are often introduced with phrases such as “for example” or “for instance.”
Which of these two statements is easier to understand?
1. Even very young children can do household chores. They can run a duster along baseboards or fold napkins for dinner.
2. Even very young children can do household chores. For instance, they can run a duster along baseboards or fold napkins for dinner.

The second item is easier to understand because the phrase "For instance" tells the reader that there is a relationship between the first and second sentence. The second sentence offers an example of the point the author makes in the first sentence.

Compare or Contrast
Comparison shows similarities. Contrast shows differences. Writers often use comparison and contrast together as a way of explaining and or analyzing the relationship between and among items, ideas, or people. Consider the relationship among these sentences as an example of how comparison and contrast can be used together and notice the role that the underlined transitional words play in making this relationship clear to the reader:

1. Advertising is part of the strategy manufacturers use to sell their products.
2. Manufacturers use advertising as a way to advertise established products as well as new products.
3. New products are generally advertised differently from established products.
4. New products are often introduced with "informational" advertising telling what the products are, why they are needed, and where they are available.
5. Established products on the other hand can rely on "reminder" advertisements, which provide little hard information about the product.

The first sentence gives the general, or main, idea. The second sentence uses "as well as" to signal that the writer is showing a similarity between the way new and established products are advertised. The word “differently” in the third sentence and "on the other hand" in the fifth sentence show that the writer is also showing differences in the way these two types of products are advertised.

Cause and Effect
Information that falls into a cause-effect pattern addresses the question "Why does an event happen?" and "What are the results of an event?" Often authors try to tell readers about events in a way that explains both what happened and why. Consider how this passage reflects the relationship between cause and effect:

In 1970 about sixty small and medium-sized factories in the United States adopted a four-day workweek. According to the plan, workers worked forty hours but instead of the usual five-day week, they now worked only four days. Workers were enthusiastic about the three-day weekly vacation. According to management, productivity has increased about 18% since the inception of the new plan. Absenteeism has dropped by 69% and lateness is almost non-existent.

What are the effects being discussed in this passage?
- Shorter work weeks
- Sixty small and medium-sized factories decided to try the four-day work week
- The seventies were a time of change
- Increased productivity and decreases in absenteeism and tardiness
Explanation:
- Answer A gives the topic of the passage but does not discuss cause or effect.
- Answer B explains who was involved in this experiment, but does not show a cause/effect relationship.
- Answer C is true, but is not discussed in this passage.
- Answer D explains the results of the four-day workweek (correct answer).

Tone
A writer’s tone reveals the attitude he or she has toward a subject. Tone is expressed through the words and details the author selects. Just as a speaker's voice can project a range of feelings, a writer's voice can project one or more tones or feelings: anger, sympathy, hopefulness, sadness, respect, dislike, and so on. Understanding tone is an important part of understanding the meaning of a passage.

To illustrate the differences a writer can express in tone, consider the following comments made by workers in a fast food restaurant.

- "I hate this job. The customers are rude, the managers are idiots, and the food smells like dog chow." (Tone: bitter, angry)
- "I have no doubt skipping class and video games will prepare me for a top position on Wall Street." (Tone: mocking, sarcastic)
- "I love working at Chicken Barn. I meet interesting people, earn extra money, and get to eat all the chicken nuggets I want when I go on break." (Tone: enthusiastic, positive)

Words that express tone reflect a feeling or judgment. Some words that describe tone include: amused, angry, ashamed, praising, and excited.

Many people who have come close to death from drowning, cardiac arrest, or other causes have described near-death experiences—profound, subjective events that sometimes result in dramatic changes in values, beliefs, behavior, and attitudes toward life and death. These experiences often include a new clarity of thinking, a feeling of well being, a sense of being out of the body, and visions of bright light or mystical encounters. Such experiences have been reported by an estimated 30 to 40 percent of hospital patients who were revived after coming close to death and about 5 percent of adult Americans in a nationwide poll. Near-death experiences have been explained as a response to a perceived threat of death (a psychological theory); as a result of biological states that accompany the process of dying (a physiological theory); and as a foretaste of an actual state of bliss after death (a transcendental theory).
